मा 1. mā, ind. (causing a following ch to be changed to chh, see Gram. 48. c), a particle of prohibition and of negation, usually translatable by 'not', or sometimes used as a conjunction and equivalent to 'that—not, lest, would that—not'; [cf. the use of Gr. μή; Lat. ne.] Mā is most commonly employed in prohibition or deprecation, when it may be joined with the imperative (e.g. mā brūhi, speak not; mā lajjasva, be not ashamed; māivaṇ vada, speak not thus); often also with the aorist, especially in later Sanskrit, when the augment is generally dropped (e.g. mā kṛitāh, do not make; mā tyākshih, do not abandon; mā śuāh, grieve not; mā bhāishih, fear not; mā ninasah, destroy not; tyāthām mānubhāh, feel not pain; or with the sense 'lest', as in Manu VIII. 15, dharmo na hantaryo mā no dharmo huto vadhāt, justice must not be destroyed, lest justice being destroyed destroy us); often with addition of the particle smā (e.g. mā smā vādih, speak not; mā smā gamaḥ, go not); sometimes with the imperfect, the augment being still cut off (e.g. mā sma bhavat, may he not become; mā sma karot, let him not do; mainam abhishāshatāh, do not speak to him, cf. Pāp. VI. 4, 74); occasionally, in epic poetry &c., with an aorist, without elision of the augment (e.g. mā kālas tvām aty-agāt, let not the season pass by thee; śradadhā no mā vyagamat, may faith not depart from us); not unfrequently with the potential, in the sense of 'wishing that anything may not happen' (e.g. mā sma janayet putram idṛiṣam, may she not bring forth such a son! mā Yamam paśyeyam, may I not see Yama! mā kuryād akāryam, O that he may do nothing wrong!); and even with the precativē (e.g. mā bhūyāt, may it not be!); more rarely with the potential, in the sense of 'prohibition' (e.g. mā mainam pratyudikshethāh, do not look at him); sometimes with the future, in the sense of 'lest, that—not' (e.g. mā tvām śapsye, lest I curse thee, that I may not curse thee); even with the fut. pass. part. (maivam prārthyam, it must not be so requested); and even with the pres. part. (e.g. mā jīvan yo dukkhu-dagdhō jīvati, he ought not [to be] living who lives consumed by pain); sometimes mā takes the place of the simple negative na (e.g. gaḥchā vā mā vā, you can go or not go; mā jetavyah, he is not to be conquered; mā gamtum arhasi, thou oughtest not to go; katham mā bhūit, how may it not be!); occasionally without a verb, which must be supplied from the context (e.g. mā śabdām, i. e. with ellipsis of kuruta, do not make a noise; mā nāma rakshīṇah, may it not be the watchmen! mainam or mā tāvat, not so, i. e. let it not be so; or with mā repeated, thus mā mā, mā maivam). In the Veda mā is sometimes followed by the particle u, blending with it into mo (e.g. Ṛig-veda V. 65, 6, mā maghonaḥ parī khyatem mo asmākam [putrān], deny us not who are rich in offerings, nor indeed our sons [according to Sāy. mo=maiva]; and Ṛig-veda I. 38, 6, mo shu vadhāt [Sāy. = sarvathā vadham mā kārshāt], let him not on any account destroy); [cf. Zend and Old Pers. mā; Gr. μή; perhaps Lat. ne.] — Mā-tīra, as, ā, am, not long, short; (am), ind. without delay, shortly, quickly (generally after an impv. or before an aor. without augment, and sometimes for na-tīram, e.g. gaḥchā mā-tīram or mā-tīram gamaḥ, go without delay; vrajīsh-yāmī mā-tīram, I will set forth without delay). — Mā-vilambam or mā-vilambitam, ind. without delay, shortly, quickly.

मा 2. mā, cl. 3. P. A. (in Ved. P.) mimāti, mimīte, mame, mātum, to low, bellow, roar, bleat, sound, make any sound or cry (especially said of cows, calves, goats, &c.); according to Nirukta II. 9, māyūm mimāti = māyūm śabdām karoti; cf. rt. mīm, mīmāyati, 2. maya, mayu, mayūra: part. of the Intens. memyat, in Ṛig-veda I. 162, 2, said to mean 'bleating as a goat'; (according to Sāy. = either hanyamāna, fr. rt. mā, or meme-śabdām kurrat.)

Mīmāṃsaka, as, m. one who thinks over or reflects deeply upon, one who examines or proves; an examiner, investigator, prover; a follower of the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā system, (see below.)

Mimāṃsana, as, m. one who examines or proves, a tester, prover, examiner, investigator.

Mīmāṃsā, f. reflection, consideration, opinion, investigation, examination, discussion, (kāvya-m), the theory of poetry, art of poetry; N. of a work; 'examination (of the sacred text); N. of one of three great divisions of orthodox Hindū philosophy (divided like the Nyāya and Sāṅkhya into two systems, viz. the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā or Karma-mīmāṃsā founded by Jaimini, and the Uttara-mīmāṃsā or Brahma-mīmāṃsā or Sāriraka-mīmāṃsā by Bādarāyaṇa, the latter, however, is more commonly called the Vedānta system, while the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā is usually called the Mīmāṃsā; though the Mīmāṃsā by Jaimini is classed among the six orthodox systems of philosophy, it does not concern itself like the others with the nature of soul, mind, and matter, but rather with a correct interpretation of the ritual of the Veda and the solution of doubts and discrepancies in regard to the Vedic texts caused by the discordant explanations of opposite schools; it may therefore be described as a critical commentary on the first or ritual portion of the Veda, and its only claim to the title of a philosophy consists in its philosophical method of interpretation, the topics being arranged according to particular categories, such as authoritativeness, indirect precept, &c., and treated according to a kind of logical sequence, which commences with the proposition to be discussed, the doubt arising about it, the Pūrva-pakṣa or primā facie and wrong view of the question, the right argument or refutation of the Pūrva-pakṣa, and the conclusion: see moreover, Pūrva-mīmāṃsā : Jaimini, whose date is unknown, taught his system in twelve books, each book containing either four or eight chapters, and each chapter being subdivided into sections comprising one or more Sūtras ; the oldest commentary on these obscure aphorisms being the Bhāṣya of Sabara-svāmīn, explained by the great Mīmāṃsā authority Kumāṛila-svāmīn or Kumāṛila-bhaṭṭa, and again elucidated by Mādhabācārya in the Jaiminīya-nyāya-māla-vistara. — Mīmāṃsā-keṭī, t, m. Yajushya, as, ā, am (fr. yajus), Ved. relating to ceremonial.

Yajus, us, n. religious reverence, veneration, worship, oblation, sacrifice (Ved.); that by which a sacrifice is effected, a sacrificial prayer or formula; a text of the Yajur-veda or rather a technical term for certain words or Mantras muttered in a peculiar manner at a sacrifice, (these Mantras were properly in prose as distinguished from the metrical ric which was recited, and the metrical sāman which was sung, see mantra, 2. ric); although, however, the prose Yajus is a distinctive feature of the Yajur-veda, this Veda is in real fact chiefly composed of verses taken from the Rīg-veda, which may then also be called Yajus, cf. Yajur-veda below; N. of the Yajur-veda, q. v., (in this sense also frequently yajunshi, n. pl.); (us), m., N. of a man. — Yajush-sākhin, ī, inī, i, familiar with a Sākha of the Yajur-veda. — Yajur-maya, as, ī, am, consisting of verses of the Yajur-veda; [cf. rin-maya.] — Yajur-lakṣmī, is, f., N. of a particular formula. — Yajur-vid, t, t, t, knowing the Yajus, conversant with sacrificial formulas, one who is familiar with the Yajur-veda. — Yajur-vidhāna, am, n., N. of a work. — Yajur-veda, as, m. 'the sacrificial Veda,' the collective body of sacred Mantras or texts which constitute the Yajur-veda, (these Mantras, though often consisting of the prose Yajus, are frequently identical with the Mantras of the Rīg-veda, the Yajur-veda being only a collection of liturgical forms or rather a sort of sacrificial prayer-book for the Adhvaryu priests formed out of the Rīg-veda, which had to be dissected and re-arranged with additional texts for sacrificial purposes; to serve these purposes, the hymns of the Rīg-veda are scattered about piecemeal, verses of the same hymn being often transposed, verses from different hymns combined, and even those of different poets brought together into one and the same hymn; in fact the compilation of the Yajur-veda resulted from the gradual growth of a complicated ritual in connection with those sacrifices without which the Hindū believed it was impossible to secure the favour of his gods, and for the performance of which the unsystematic collection of hymns in the Rīg-veda was unsuited: the great characteristic feature of the Yajur-veda is its division into two distinct collections of texts, the one called Taittiriya-samhitā or Krishna, i. e. 'Black' [because in it the Samhitā or simple collection of texts and Brāhmaṇa or explanation of the rites in which the texts were employed is confused]; the other called Vājasaneyi-samhitā or Sukla, i. e. 'White' [because in this, which is thought to be the more recent of the two recensions, the Samhitā is cleared from confusion with its Brāhmaṇa, and therefore looks white and orderly]; the order of sacrifices, however, of both divisions of the Yajur-veda is similar, two of the principal being the Darśa-pūrṇa-māsa or sacrifice to be performed at new and full moon, and the Āśva-medha or horse-sacrifice; cf. Taittiriya-samhitā, Vājasaneyi-samhitā. — Yajurveda-srāddha, N. of a work (treating of the prayers and rites to be used at the anniversaries of the death of parents according to the school of the Yajur-veda). — Yajur-vedin, ī, inī, i, familiar with the Yajur-veda. — Yajurvedi-vriṣhotsarga-tattva ('sha-ul'), am, n., N. of part of the Smṛiti-tattva by Raghunandana on the release of a bull according to the teaching of the Yajur-veda. — Yajurvedi-srāddha-tattva, am, n., N. of certain verses by Raghunandana on the anniversaries of the death of parents according to the school of the Yajur-veda. — Yajush-kṛita, as, ā, am, Ved. performed with a Yajus, consecrated or dedicated with a sacrificial formula. — Yajush-kṛiti, is, f., Ved. consecration or dedication with a sacrificial formula. — Yajush-kriyā, f., Ved. a rite or ceremony accompanied with a Yajus. — Yajush-tama, Ved. superl. of yajus. — Yajush-tara, Ved. compar. of yajus. — Yajush-tas, ind., Ved. from a Yajus; in relation to a Yajus; on the authority of the Yajur-veda. — Yajush-tā, f. or yajush-tva, am, n., Ved. the state of a Yajus. — Yajush-pati, is, m. यद् yad, yas, yā, yad (the actual base of this relative pronoun is ya, except in compounds and in the derivative yadiya; its proper correlative is tad, q. v., but other demonstrative pronouns and pronominals, such as etad, idam, adas, tādṛṣa, idṛṣa, sarva, often occur in the correlative clauses; see 3. ya), who, which, what, that, whoever, whichever, whatever, any. The relative yad often precedes the noun to which it refers, this noun being either put in the same case with the relative or joined with the demonstrative (e. g. yasya narasya buddhiḥ sa balavān or yasya buddhiḥ sa naro balavān, of whatever man there is intellect he is strong); sometimes the relative stands alone, an antecedent noun or pronoun being understood from which it takes its gender and number (e. g. dhanena kṛm yo na dadāti, what is the use of wealth [to him] who does not give?); or the relative itself may be dropped (e. g. na karoty a-kāryam tam āryam āhuḥ, they call him honourable [who] does nothing improper to be done). Sometimes the relative yad, with or without its demonstrative, appears to be used redundantly to eke out the metre, or perhaps to give force to the noun with which it is connected, even the neut. sing. being occasionally thus used in connection with words of a different gender and number, and the relative being itself almost untranslatable (e. g. yan maraṇam so 'ya viśramah, that very death is his rest; andho jadaḥ pīṭha-sarpī sapatyā śhāviraś-ca yah, a blind man, an idiot, a cripple, and a man seventy years old; yat kṣhāntiḥ samaye śrutiḥ Śiva Śivetyuktir mano-nīrṛtiḥ asau multī-mārga śhitiḥ, forbearance, obedience to ordinances, saying 'Śiva, Śiva', contentment of mind, this is continuance on the road of emancipation); and sometimes this redundant or emphatic use of yad causes a sudden change of construction from accusative to nominative (e. g. apoheta rasān asmano lavaṇam caiva paśavo ye ca, he should avoid liquids, stones, and salt, and all cattle). The relative yad is often repeated to express 'whoever', 'whatever', 'whichever', &c. (e. g. yo yah, whatever man; yā yā, whatever woman; yad yad, whatever thing; yo yo yavātithaḥ, whichever [is] how many soever degrees, i. e. in proportion as each of which is advanced in the series); or the repetition of yad may be caused by a kind of attraction, the second relative being equivalent to an indefinite pronoun (e.g. yo yasya bhārah syāt, whatever may be the disposition of any one; yad rocate yasmai, whatever is pleasing to any one); or the relative may be used to express similar indefinite meanings when joined with kaścīd, kaścana, ko 'pi, kaśca, ko vā (e.g. yah kaścīd or yah-kaścana, whosoever; yat kinēd or yat kinēca, whatsoever; yena kenāpy upāyena, by any means whatsoever; yāni kīni ēa mītrāni, any friends whatsoever; yasmai kasmāi ēa, to any one whatever; yasmin kasmīn vā dēse, in any country whatever); or even with a demonstrative pronoun (e.g. yasmai tasmai, to any one whatever; yasmāt tasmāt, from any one, from this or that person; yena tena karmaṇā, by any act whatever); or sometimes the relative yad is used alone with the indefinite sense 'any one,' &c. (e.g. striyaṃ spṛśēd yah saṃgrahaṇam smṛitam, should any one touch a woman it is called an adulterous act; yām ajām vṛiko hanyāt pālē tat kilviṣam bhavet, if a wolf kill any she-goat the blame must be on the keeper). Yad is also connected in a peculiar manner with the personal pronouns, which, when placed immediately after the relative, appear to derive force or emphasis from this juxtaposition (e.g. yo 'ham, I that very person who; yas tvam, thou that very one who, &c.). Yad in the neut. sing. is used as an adverbial conjunction equivalent to 'for which reason,' 'on which account,' 'wherefore,' 'since,' 'as,' 'because,' 'when,' 'while,' 'if,' 'with regard to,' 'as to,' &c.; or still oftener as a simple conjunction meaning 'that,' especially after the verbs of saying, hearing, &c., or such words as kāma, yukta, āśārya, &c. (e.g. dhīvarair uktam yat —, it was said by the fishermen that —; śrutam trayā yat —, it has been heard by thee that —; āśāryam yat —, it is a wonder that —); frequently followed by a verb in the indicative (e.g. ayam nūtano nīyāyo yad arātīm hatvā santāpāḥ kṛiyate, this is a new doctrine that having killed an enemy remorse is experienced); less frequently in the potential (e.g. eṣha me kīma yat sa rājyam āpuyāt, this is my desire that he may obtain the kingdom); yad api, although; yad-ēa, that (according to Pāṇ. III. 3, 148, with potential, after expressions of impossibility, disbelief, hope, disregard, reproach, and wonder, e.g. na śrad-dadhe yad-ēa tatra-bhāvān vṛishalam yūjāyēt, I do not believe that your Highness will allow a Śūdra to sacrifice); yad vā, or, or else, whether, (in the writings of commentators yad vā generally occurs when an alternative reading or meaning is proposed, and may commonly be translated by 'or,' 'or else'): in philosophical writings yah is said to be used as a synonym for puruṣaḥ: [cf. Zend ya: Gr. ὅς, ῥ, ὅ, ὅς, ὅς; Goth. ja-hai, 'if'; jan, 'whether'; Lith. ji-s, 'he'; ji, 'she'; ju, 'it'; Slav. ī, ja, je.] — Yad-chandas, ās, ās, as, having which metre. — Yad-chila, as, ā, am (yad + chila), having which disposition. — Yat-kara, as, ī, am, which doing or undertaking. — Yat-kāma, as, ā, am, Ved. which desiring, wishing which. — Yat-kāmyā, ind., Ved. with which view or design. — Yat-kāraṇam or yat-kāraṇāt, ind. for which cause or reason, on which account, in consequence of which; since, because, as, while. — Yat-kārin, i, inī, ī, which doing or undertaking. — Yat-kinēdam (ēa-īdam), the commencement of the sacred text Rīg-veda VII. 89, 5, (incorrectly read yat-kinēdam). — Yat-kṛite, ind. on account of which, for which reason, wherefore, why. — Yat-kratu, us, us, us, Ved. having which resolution, forming which plan. — Yad-abhāve, ind. in the absence of which, for want of which, in default of which. — Yad-arthā, as, ā, am, having which object in view, having which intention; (am, ē), ind. on which account, for which purpose, for the sake of which, wherefore, why, &c.; as, since, when, because, whereas. — Yad-ātma, as, īkā, am, having which being or existence. — Yad-ricchā, f, acting as one lists, following one's own inclination, self-will, spontaneity, wilfulness, independence, (according to native lexicographers = svairitā, svēdchā, svādechāndya, nirni-mitta); accident, an accidental occurrence or event, chance, contingency, (yad-ricchayā, as one likes, of one's own accord, spontaneously, by accident, accidentally, incidentally, by chance, unexpectedly); (in grammar) a noun which is neither a generic nor specific term nor noun of agency, one either not derived from authority or not possessing meaning. — Yad-ricchā-tas, ind. spontaneously, by accident, &c. (= yad-ricchayā above). — Yad-ricchābhijña (ēhā-abh), as, m, a voluntary or self-offered witness. — Yad-ricchā-lābha-tushṭa, as, ā, am, satisfied with obtaining what comes spontaneously, easily satisfied. — Yad-ricchā-sampāda, as, m, accidental or spontaneous conversation, incidental intercourse. — Yad-ricchika, as, m, scil. putra, a son who offers himself for adoption. — Yad-devata or yad-devatya, as, ā, am, Ved. having which god-head or divinity. — Yad-dvānda, am, n, N, of a Sāman. — Yad-dhetos, ind. (dhetos for hetos, abl. c. of hetu), from which reason or cause, on which account. — Yad-bhaviṣya, as, m, one who says 'what will be,' or 'what must be must be,' one who believes in the power of fate; a fatalist; N, of a fish (in the Hitopadeśa). — Yad-riyānē or yad-riyānē, an, drīcī, ak (fr. yad with adri substituted for ad and ri and ci; cf. mad-riyānē), Ved. moving or turning in which direction, extending to which point, reaching whither or to what place or in which direction, (incorrectly written yad-riyānē, yad-riyānē). — Yad-vat, ind. in which way, as, (used as a correlative of tad-vat and evam). — Yad-vada, as, ā, am, talking anything, talking nonsense, saying no matter what. — Yad-vāhishṭhiya, am, n, (fr. yad vāhishṭham, the first two words of Rīg-veda V. 25, 7). N, of a Sāman. — Yad-vidha, as, ā, am, of which sort (= Lat. qualis). — Yad-vṛitta, am, n, anything which has occurred, an adventure; any form of yad. — Yan-nimittam, ind. on which account, for which reason, in consequence of which, through which. — Yanmanhishṭhiya, am, n, N, of a Sāman. — Yan-madhya, ind. in the centre of which. — Yan-maya, as, ī, am, formed or consisting of which. — Yan-mātra, as, ā, am, having which measure, of which dimensions or circumference, &c. — Yan-mūrdhan, ā, m, the head of whom.

Yadā, ind. at what time, when, whenever, (generally followed in the correlative clause by tadā or tatas or tatthi or in Ved. by ād ī); whereas, since, as; if; yadā yadā, whenever; yadā tadā, at any time whatsoever; yadā yadā—tadā tadā, as often as—so often; yadāiva—tadāiva, when indeed—then indeed; yadā prabhṛiti—tadā prabhṛiti, from whatever time—from that time forward; yadā-kadā-ēa, Ved. as often as, whenever; yadā-kadā-ēt, at any time; na yadā-kadā-ēt, never at any time; yadā is sometimes joined in the same sentence with other relatives used indefinitely (e.g. yo 'tti yasya yadā māṃsam, when any one eats the flesh of any one).

Yadī, ind. (in Ved. sometimes lengthened to yadī), if, in case that; whether; if haply, if perchance; provided that, when. As a conjunction meaning 'if,' yadī is sometimes joined with the present indicative (e.g. yadī jīvati bhadrāṇi paśyati, if he live he will behold prosperity); sometimes with the potential (e.g. yadī rājā daṇḍam na praṇayēt, if the king were not to inflict punishment; or with omission of yadī, e.g. vṛiko hanyād ajām, if a wolf should kill a goat); sometimes with the future (e.g. yadī na karishyanti tat, if they will not do that); sometimes with the aorist or even imperfect or perfect (e.g. yadī Prajā-patir na vapur asrākṣhāt, if the Creator had not created the body; yady etan na me 'kathayāt, if he were not to tell me that; yady āha, if he had said); sometimes with the conditional (e.g. yady anujñām adāsyat, if he should give permission); sometimes yadī may be translated by 'that' (e.g. nāsanse yadī jivanti, I do not expect that they are alive); rarely yadī is joined redundantly with ēd (e.g. yadī ēt syāt, if it should be); or with purā (e.g. purā yadī paśyāmi, before that I see); yady-api, even if, although, (followed by tathāpi, q.v., or tadapi in the correlative clause); yadī vā, or if, or whether; or else, or; or rather (= atha vā); yadī—yadī vā, yadī vā—yadī vā, yadī vā—vā, if—or if, whether—or.

Yama, as, m, a rein, curb, bridle (Ved.); a driver, charioteer (Ved.); restraining, controlling, taming, keeping in check, restraint, (vācāṃ yamāt, restraint of words, silence); self-control, any great moral duty or observance, (as opposed to niyama, a minor duty or observance, see Manu IV. 204; some of the Yamas are as follow, 'restraining the organs of sense,' 'chastity, and the control of all sensual desires,' 'refraining from violence or injury,' 'patience,' 'truthfulness,' 'honesty'); a twin, one of a pair or couple, a fellow, (yamau, 'the twins,' an epithet of the Aśvins and of their twin children by Mādrī, called Nakula and Sahadeva); a symbolical expression for the number two; N. of the god who presides over the Pitris, q. v., and rules the spirits of the dead, (he is regarded in Post-vedic mythology as the appointed Judge and 'Restraîner' or Punisher of the dead, in which capacity he corresponds to the Greek Pluto and to Minos; he is one of the eight guardians of the world as regent of the South quarter, in which direction in some region of the lower world is his abode, called Yama-pura; thither a soul, when it leaves the body, is said to repair, and there, after the recorder, Citra-gupta, has read an account of its actions kept in a book called Agra-sandhāni, it receives a just sentence, either ascending to heaven or to the world of the Pitris or being driven down to one of the twenty-one hells [called the awful provinces of the kingdom of Yama] to be born again, after undergoing its appointed recompense of bliss or pain, in higher or lower forms of being; in unison with these functions Yama is sometimes called 'king of Justice' or simply 'Justice' [see dharma-rāja, dharma], sometimes 'Rod-bearer' or 'Noose-bearer' [see daṇḍa-dhara, pāśin], sometimes 'lord of the Pitris or Manes' [see pitri-pati], sometimes 'king of Death' or simply 'Death' [see mṛityu-rāj, mṛityu, kāla, antaka], sometimes 'god of the Śrāddha' [see śrāddha-deva]; in the Vana-parvan of the Mahā-bhārata, l. 16754, where there is a story of his appearing to a dying man, he is described as dressed in blood-red garments, with a glittering form, a crown on his head, glowing eyes, and, like Varuṇa, holding a noose, with which he binds the spirit after drawing it from the body, in size about the measure of a man's thumb: he is otherwise represented as grim in aspect, green in colour, clothed in red, riding on a buffalo, and holding a club in one hand and noose in the other: he is said to possess two four-eyed watch-dogs, called Karburā [= Cerberus?], 'spotted,' and Syāma, 'dark,' which guard the road to his abode: in the later mythology he is always represented as a terrible deity inflicting tortures, called yāvanā, on departed souls: according to some the earlier legends point to the original meaning of his name being 'twin,' and make him a kind of first man, Yama and his twin sister Yamī being the first pair of beings born from Vivasvat, 'the Sun,' and his wife Saranyū; the seventh Manu, another form of the first man, being also born from the Sun, and so regarded as a brother of Yama, [see especially R̥g-veda X. 10, part of which is ascribed to the authorship of Yama Vaisvata, and cf. Vatvasvata]; Yama is, however, described as resisting sexual alliance with his sister; Yama is also regarded as the regent of the Nakshatra Apabharaṇī or Bharāṇī, see yama-devatā; N. of the author of a hymn to Viṣṇu; of the author of a Dharma-śāstra; of the planet Saturn, (Saturn being regarded as the son of Vivasvat and Chāyā); of one of Skanda's attendants (mentioned together with Ati-Yama); a crow [cf. yama-dātaka]; (ās), m. pl., N. of a class of deities with Buddhists; (ī), f., N. of Yama's twin sister, who is identified in Post-vedic mythology with the river goddess Yamunā; (am), n. a pair, brace, couple; (in gram.) the twin letter of any consonant, (when a nasal consonant follows immediately after one of the four other consonants in each class, the consonant preceding the nasal may be doubled, and the interposed letter is then called its yama or twin, thus in kkn, the interposed k is a yama; but this interposed letter is generally understood, and not written in practice); pitch of the voice, tone of utterance, key; (as, ā or ī, am), twin-born, twin, double, coupled, paired. — Yama-kālindī, f., N. of Saijñā (wife of the Sun and, according to one account, mother of Yama). — Yama-kinkara, as, m. Rudra, as, ā, am (according to Uṇādi-s. II. 22. fr. rt. 1. rud above; according to others fr. rt. 1. ru + dra fr. rt. 2. dru, to run; connected with rodas, q. v., and perhaps with rudhira), crying, howling, roaring, one who cries or roars, dreadful, horrible, terrific, awful; great, large; (according to the fanciful etymologies of native writers, the following meanings are also assigned to this word), driving away evil; running about and roaring; praiseworthy, to be praised, (according to Naigh. III. 16) = stotṛi, a praiser, panegyrist, worshipper; (as), m. 'the Roarer' or 'Howler,' N. of the god of tempests and father of the Rudras or Maruts, (originally perhaps the mere personified roaring of the storms, but as the crackling or raging of fire may resemble the sound of wind, so in the Veda the god of storms is sometimes identified with the god of fire; though generally represented as a destroying deity whose terrible shafts bring death or disease on men and cattle, he is also addressed as benevolent and auspicious [śiva], and is even supposed to have a healing efficacy from his chasing away vapours and purifying the atmosphere; hence he has various epithets in the Veda, such as 'multiform,' 'terrible as a wild beast,' 'tawny-coloured,' 'wearing braided hair' [kapaṛdīn], 'celestial boar,' 'armed with a strong bow and fleet arrows,' 'cause of prosperity to man and beast,' 'possessor of healing remedies,' 'greatest of physicians,' &c.; he is of course ruler of the Rudras, who are the same as the storm winds, more usually called Maruts, and who are often associated with Indra [see marut]: in the later mythology the epithet śiva, 'propitious,' which does not occur as a name in the Veda, was employed as the real name of the destroying deity, being at first applied as an euphemism to propitiate him: moreover the character of the deity lost its special connection with storms, and developed into a personification of the destroying principle generally, though even the Epic and Purāṇic Śiva was regarded as the generator as well as destroyer: moreover a new class of beings, described as eleven in number, though still called Rudras, took the place of the original Rudras or Maruts: in the Veda only three groupings of deities into classes appear to be recognised, Indra belonging to the Vasus, Varuṇa to the Ādityas, and Rudra to the Rudras or Maruts; but in Manu XI. 221. the Maruts are enumerated as a fourth group, being there distinguished from the eleven Rudras: in Vishnu-Purāṇa I. 7. Rudra is said to have sprung from Brahmā's forehead, and to have afterwards separated himself into a figure half male and half female, the former portion separating again into the eleven Rudras, who were so called because they 'ran about crying aloud' [rudānād drāvaṇāc-ā, cf. rts. 1. rud, 2. dru]; hence these later Rudras are sometimes regarded as inferior manifestations of Śiva, and most of their names are also names of Śiva; these names are variously given in the different Purāṇas; those of the Vāyu are Ajaiakapād, Ahvi-bradhna, Hara, Nir-ṛita, Īśvara, Bhuvana, Angāraka, Ardhā-ketu, Mṛityu, Sarpa, Kapālin: according to other accounts the Rudras are represented as children of Kāśyapa and Surabhi or of Brahmā and Surabhi or of Bhūta and Su-ṛpā; a form or manifestation or N. of Śiva (in the later mythology, as explained above; according to the Vishnu-Purāṇa I. 8. Rudra is one of the eight forms of Śiva; he is elsewhere reckoned among the Dik-pālas as regent of the north-east quarter); a symbolical expression for the number eleven (from the eleven Rudras, see above); a mystical epithet of the letter e; Calotropis Gigantea; N. of various persons; of a lexicographer; of a poet; of a king; (ās), m. pl. the Rudras (described above); an abbreviated expression for the texts or hymns addressed to the Rudras [cf. rudra-japa]; (ā), f. Vasishṭha, as, m. (superl. of vasu or vasu-mat; cf. vasiṣay), 'the most wealthy'; N. of a very celebrated Vedic Rishi or inspired sage (owner of the 'cow of plenty,' called Nandini, offspring of Surabhi, which by granting all desires made him, as his name implies, master of every vasu or desirable object; he was the typical representative of Brāhmanical dignity, and the legends of his conflict with Viśvā-mitra, who raised himself from the military to the sacerdotal class, though probably founded on the actual struggles which took place between the Brāhmins and Kshatriyas, were doubtless mostly invented to impress the mind with the power and superiority of the priesthood; a great many hymns of the R̥g-veda are ascribed to these two great rivals, those of the seventh Maṇḍala, besides some others, being attributed to Vasishṭha, while those of the third Maṇḍala are assigned to Viśvā-mitra; in one of Vasishṭha's hymns he is represented as king Su-dās's family priest, an office to which Viśvā-mitra also aspired; in another hymn Vasishṭha claims to have been inspired by Varuṇa, and in another [R̥g-veda VII. 33, 11] he is called the son of the Apsaras Urvāśi by Mitra and Varuṇa, whence his patronymic Maitrāvaruṇi; in Manu I. 35. he is enumerated among the ten Prajā-patis or Patriarchs produced by Manu Svāyambhuva for the peopling of the universe; in the Mahā-bhārata he is mentioned as the family priest of the solar race or family of Ikshvāku and Rāma-candra, and in the Purāṇas as one of the arrangers of the Vedas in the Dvāpara age; in the first and second chapters of the Raghu-vaṇśa he is described as releasing king Dilpa from his curse of childlessness by directing him to attend upon the cow Nandini in atonement for an offence he had unintentionally committed against the parent cow Surabhi; according to one account Vasishṭha married Ūrjā, 'Strength'; according to another, Arundhatī, one of the Pleiades, by whom he had seven sons [see arundhatī]; other legends make him one of the seven great patriarchal sages regarded as forming the stars of the Great Bear [see rishī]; his name is often written Vasishṭha, q. v., in which case it must be connected with vasā and vasin; N. of the author of a law-book (perhaps intended to be ascribed to the Vedic Rishi above); (ās), m. pl. the family of Vasishṭha; (Vasishṭhasyāṅkuśa and Vasishṭhasyā-nupadam, N. of two Sāmāns.) = Vasishṭha-tantra, am, n., N. of a Tantra work. = Vasishṭha-putra, ās, m. pl. वि I. vi, ind. (thought by some to be for an original dvi, meaning 'in two parts'; as a preposition or prefix to verbs it is opposed to sam, q. v., and expresses) apart, apart from, asunder, in different directions, to and fro, about, away, away from, off, &c. (e.g. vi-yuj, to disjoin, separate; vi-dṛ, to tear asunder; vi-kṛ, to scatter in different directions; vi-śat, to move to and fro; vi-śhīd, to cut away, cut off); when prefixed to some roots, vi gives a meaning opposite to the idea contained in the simple rt. (e.g. krī, to buy; vi-kṛ, to sell; smṛ, to remember; vi-smṛ, to forget); in other cases it appears either not to affect or simply to intensify that idea [cf. naś, vi-naś, hīṣa, vi-hīṣa]. Vi may also be used with verbs or nouns, and other parts of speech derived from verbs, to express 'division' [cf. vi-bhid, vi-bheda, vi-bhaj, vi-bhāga]; 'distinction' [cf. vi-śish, vi-śeṣa, vi-viś, vi-śeṣa]; 'discrimination' [cf. vy-avacchid, vy-avaccheda]; 'distribution', 'arrangement', 'order' [cf. vi-dhā, vi-dhāna]; 'opposition' [cf. vi-rudh, vi-rodha]; 'discussion', 'deliberation' [cf. vi-car, vi-ēara]; 'privation' [cf. vi-ni, vi-nayana]. Vi may also be used with nouns, adjective or substantive, not immediately connected with verbs, to express 'difference' [cf. vi-lakshaya]; 'variety' [cf. vi-ditra]; 'distinction' [cf. vi-śeṣa]; 'intensity', 'greatness', 'largeness' [cf. vi-karāṇa]; 'change' [cf. vi-kāra]; 'manifoldness' [cf. vi-rūṣha]; 'contrariety' [cf. vi-loma]; 'impropriety', 'deviation from right' [cf. vi-janman, vi-karmika]; 'negation' or 'privation' (e.g. vi-jana, devoid of men; in this sense vi is used like nā, q. v., and like 3. a, q. v.); in this latter signification the use of vi often corresponds to that of the Latin dis, &c., and the English prefixes a, ex, de, dis, in, &c.; [cf. Old Germ. wi-dar, 'against'; Pers. bi, 'without'; perhaps Lat. ex, in words like ex-cors, ex-sanus, vi in di-vi-dere; Lith. be, 'without'; Slav. beč (perhaps = vahis.)]

वि 2. vi, is, m. f. (according to Upādi-s. IV. 133. fr. rt. vā, the final of the rt. being rejected; a form vi is also given, and according to some the word vi may be fr. rt. I. vi), Ved. a goer; a bird [cf. vīka]; a horse (from its fleetness); a rein (according to Sāy.); epithet of the Soma; of a sacrificer; the eye (?); heaven (?); the region of the wind (?); [cf. Zend vi; Gr. ol-ovó-s, al-ε-ρό-s, áiov, áov; Lat. avis, ovum; Old Germ. ei; Angl. Sax. æg.] = 1. vi-gata, am, n. (for 2. see under vi-gam), the flight of birds. = 1. vi-śhāya, am, n. (for 2. see s. v.), the shadow of a flock of birds.

विश्व viśva, as, ā, am (in Uṇādi-s. I. 151, said to be fr. rt. i. viś, 'to pervade'; according to some connected with rt. śvi with vi; declined as a pronominal, like sarva, nom. pl. masc. viśve, see Gram. 238; cf. śarvat, śivratā), all, every, every one, (viśvāmā Indra uttarā, Indra is higher than all, Rig-veda X. 86, 1), entire, whole, universal; (as), m, N. of a kind of deity belonging to a class of ten (forming one of the nine Gaṇas or classes enumerated under Gaṇa-devatā, q. v.; in Rig-veda X. 130, 5. they are associated with the Jagatī metre, and called Viśve devāḥ, which may have originally denoted 'all the gods collectively,' though the introduction of the Viśvas under the name viśva-devāḥ or viśve-devāḥ, as a separate troop or Gaṇa of deities, seems to have taken place at an early period: according to the Vishnu and other Purāṇas they were sons of Viśvā, daughter of Dakṣa, and their names are given as follow, 1. Vasu, 2. Satya, 3. Kratu, 4. Dakṣa, 5. Kāla, 6. Kāma, 7. Dhṛiti, 8. Kuru, 9. Purī-rava, 10. Mādrava; two others are added by some authorities, viz. 11. Roṇaka or Loṇaka, 12. Dhivani [also written Dhūri?]: they are particularly worshipped at the Srāddhas or funeral obsequies in honour of deceased ancestors: moreover, according to Manu III. 90, 121, offerings should be made to them daily,—these privileges having been bestowed on them, it is said, by Brahmā and the Pitṛs, as a reward for certain severe austerities they had performed on the Himālaya: sometimes, however, it is difficult to decide whether the expression viśve devāḥ refers to all the gods or to the particular troop of deities described above; N. of Intellect in the Vedānta philosophy, or (according to some) the faculty which perceives Singleness, (perhaps translatable by 'the Pervader'; according to a commentator = ethūla-sarira-vyashyati-upahita-caitanya, 'intellect located in the distributive aggregate of material bodies'); N. of a well known lexicon, = viśva-prakāśa, q. v.; (ā), f., N. of a daughter of Dakṣa and wife of Dharma; the plant Aconitum Ferox; a tree used for dying red (commonly called Atis = Betula); the shrub Asparagus Racemosus (= satāvare); another plant (= pippali); dry ginger; (am), n. the whole world, universe, whole creation; dry ginger. — Viśva-kadru, us, us, u, wicked, vile; (us), m. a dog trained for the chase; sound, noise. — Viśva-karman, ā, m. 'one who does universal acts, all-doer, all-creator, all-maker,' N. of the architect or artist of the gods (said to be son of Brahmā, and in the later mythology sometimes identified with Tvaṣṭri, q. v., not only as an architect, but as a kind of chief engineer or forger of divine weapons, and inventor of the agny-astra, q. v.; in this capacity Viśva-karman is said to have revealed the Śthāpatya-veda, q. v., or fourth Upa-veda, and to preside over all manual labours as well as the sixty-four mechanical arts, [whence he is worshipped by Kārus or artizans]; in the Vedic mythology, however, the office of Indian Vulcan is assigned to Tvaṣṭri as a distinct deity, Viśva-karman being rather identified with Prajā-pati [Brahmā] himself as the creator of all things and architect of the universe; in the hymns Rig-veda X. 81, 82, he is represented as the universal Father and Generator, the one all-seeing God, who has on every side eyes, faces, arms, and feet, who blows forth heaven and earth with his arms and wings, who knows all worlds, gives the gods their names, and is beyond the comprehension of mortals; in Nirukta X. 26, and elsewhere in the Brahmaṇas he is called a son of Bhuvana, and Viśva-karman Bhauvana is described as the author of the two Rig-veda hymns X. 81, 82, mentioned above; moreover, a doubtful legend is told of his having offered up all beings, including himself, in sacrifice; the Rāmāyaṇa represents him as having built the city of Lankā for the Rākṣhasas, and as having generated the ape Nala, who made Rāma's bridge from the continent to the island; the name Viśva-karman, meaning 'doing all acts,' appears to be sometimes applicable as an epithet to any great divinity; epithet of Sūrya or the Sun; of one of the seven principal rays of the sun (supposed to supply heat to the planet Mercury); epithet of Mahā-deva (Mahā-bh. Śānti-parvan 10332); epithet of Indra (Rig-veda VIII. 87, 2); of a son of the Vasu Prabhāsa; any great saint. — Viśvakarma-sutā or viśvakarma-jā, f. 'daughter of Viśva-karman,' epithet of Saijñā (one of the wives of the Sun). — Viśva-kāya, as, ā, am, whose body is the universe (said of Vishnu); (ā), f., N. of a goddess. — Viśva-kārya, as, m., N. of one of the seven principal rays of the sun (supposed to supply heat to the planet Venus; cf. viśva-karman). — Viśva-kṛit, t, t, i, making or creating all; (t), m. the creator or maker of all things; epithet of Viśva-karman, son of Brahmā, (see above); N. of a son of Gādhī or Gāthin, and brother of Viśvā-mitra. — Viśva-kṛita, as, ā, am, made by Viśva-karman (?). — Viśva-kṛishī, is, is, i, Ved. (probably) known to all men; [cf. viśva-carshaṇi]. — Viśva-keṭu, us, m. 'whose banner is the universe,' epithet of A-niruddha, (a form of Kāma, as son of Pradyumna). — Viśva-kosha, as, m. the lexicon called Viśva (= viśva-prakāśa). — Viśva-ga, as, m. 'going everywhere,' N. of Brahmā. — Viśva-gandha, as, m. 'having much odour,' an onion; (ā), f. 'having all fragrance,' the earth (as having the quality of odour, see gupa); (am), n. myrrh (= vola). — Viśva-guṇādarśa ('ṇa-ād'), as, m. 'mirror of the virtues of the world,' N. of a work by Venkaṭa (relating the history of Southern India). — Viśva-gudh, ghut, t, i, all-enveloping. — Viśva-gūrta, as, ā, am, Ved. approved by every body, accomplisher of all deeds, prepared for all acts, (Sāy. = sarveshu kāryeshudyata, Rig-veda VIII. 1, 22). — Viśva-goptrī, tā, m. 'preserver of the universe,' epithet of Vishnu; of Indra. — Viśva-granthi, is, f. the plant Cissus Pedata (= haṇsa-paṭī). — Viśvan-kara, as, i, am, all-creating, making all; (as), m. the eye. — Viśva-ākra, am, n., N. of a particular kind of large gift or offering consisting of a mass of pure gold. — Viśva-āksha, as, ā, am, Ved. all-seeing. — Viśva-ākshas, ās, ās, as, Ved. all-seeing, all-beholding, (said of Viśva-karman, Rig-veda X. 81, 2, and of Sūrya I. 50, 2). — Viśva-āndra, as, ā, am, Ved. all-radiant, all-brilliant. — Viśva-carshaṇi, is, is, i, Ved. known to all men, extending everywhere, world-wide, seeing everything, comprising all men. — Viśva-jana, am, n. all men, all mankind, mankind generally. — Viśva-janina, as, ā, am, fit or good for all men, suitable to all mankind. — Viśva-janina-vṛitti, is, is, i, whose conduct or actions are for the benefit of the whole world. — Viśva-janiya, as, ā, am, relating or suitable to all men. — Viśva-janya, as, ā, am, belonging or relating to all mankind, fit or good for all men, universally beneficial. — Viśva-jit, t, t, i, all-conquering, all-subduing; (t), m., N. of a particular ceremony or sacrifice; the cord or noose of Varuṇa; N. of a son of Gādhī and brother of Viśvā-mitra; of a son of Satya-jit. — Viśva-jinva, as, ā, am, Ved. all-refreshing, all-sustaining. — Viśva-jū, is, us, u, Ved. all-impelling, (Sāy. = viśvāya prarajitī, Rig-veda IV. 33, 8). — Viśva-tas, &c., see p. 945, col. 3. — Viśva-tur, ār, ār, ār, Ved. all-subduing, conquering everything. — Viśva-darśata, as, ā, am, Ved. all-conspicuous, visible to all; to be honoured by all. — Viśva-deva, as, m. a Viśva-deva or deity of a particular class, see under viśva; (ā), f. the plant Hedysarum Lagopodioides; (as, ā, am), possessing all divine attributes, containing all the gods. — Viśva-devya, as, ā, am, Ved. distinguished by all divine attributes; relating or acceptable to all the gods, Rig-veda III. 2, 5. — Viśva-dohas, ās, ās, as, Ved. milking or yielding all things, all-productive. — Viśva-dhara, as, m. 'all-containing,' a proper N. — Viśva-dhāyas, ās, ās, as (see i and a. dhāyas), Ved. one who bears every thing, all-sustaining, all-nourishing. — Viśva-dhārin,

(according to some authorities for viśva + amitra, and meaning 'no friend to all,' but more probably for viśva-mītra, 'the friend of all,' the final of viśva being lengthened), N. of a celebrated Kshatriya, described as son of Gāthīn or Gādhī, deriving his lineage from an ancestor of Kuśika, named Purū-ravas, of the lunar race of kings, and himself sovereign of Kanyā-kubja or Kanoj, (according to one account he was brother of Satya-vatī, wife of Riciṅka and mother by him of Jamad-agni, q. v., who was the father of Paraśu-rāma; he had one hundred sons, fifty of whom offended their father, and being degraded by him to the condition of outcasts, became the progenitors of various barbarous tribes and Dasys: the fame of Viśva-mitra rests chiefly on his contests with the great Brāhman Vasishṭha, and his success in elevating himself, though a Kshatriya, to the rank of a Brāhman, see Mann VII. 42: the Rāmāyana, which makes him a companion and counsellor of the young Rāma-āndra, records [I. 51-65] how Viśvā-mitra, on his accession to the throne, visited the hermitage of Vasishṭha, and seeing there the cow of plenty [probably typical of go, 'the earth'], offered the Muni untold treasures in exchange for it, but being refused, prepared to take it by force; a long contest ensued between the king and the saint [symbolical of the struggles between the Kshatriya and Brāhmanical classes], which ended in the defeat of Viśvā-mitra, whose vexation was such that, in order to become a Brāhman and thus conquer his rival, he devoted himself to intense austerities, gradually increasing the rigour of his mortification through thousands of years, till he successively earned the titles of Rājārshi, Rishi, Maharshi, and finally Brahmarshi; during the course of these penances Indra and the gods jealous of his increasing power—as exhibited in his transporting king Tri-śanku to the skies, and in saving his nephew Sunah-śepha, son of his own brother-in-law Riciṅka, out of the hands of Indra, to whom he had been promised by king Ambarīṣa as a victim in a sacrifice—sent first the nymph Menakā and subsequently Rambhā to seduce him from his passionless life, and his surrender to the allurements of the first of these nymphs led to the birth of a daughter called Sakuntalā, q. v., the heroine of the celebrated drama; the rivalry between Viśvā-mitra and Vasishṭha is alluded to in many passages of the Rig-veda; it is thought, therefore, that as caste distinctions had not then become fixed, the later myths on the subject of this rivalry may have rested on a Vedic legend, according to which king Su-dās, having employed Vasishṭha as his domestic priest, allowed on various occasions Viśvā-mitra also to officiate, which of course led to jealousies and quarrels between these two functionaries: the whole of the hymns of the third Maṇḍala of the Rig-veda and a few others are attributed to Viśvā-mitra or to members of his family); Viśvāmītrasyātyardha, N. of a Sāman; (ās), m. pl. the family or descendants of Viśvā-mitra; (ā), f., N. of a river. — Viśvāmītra-priya, as, m. विष्णु viṣṇu, ūs, m., Ved., N. of a Rishi (restored to his father Viśvaka by the *Āsvin*s).

विष्णु viṣṇu, us, us, u (in Unādi-s. III. 39. said to be fr. rt. 2. viśh, 'to pervade'; according to some fr. rt. 1. viś), all-pervading, encompassing, pervading, penetrating (Ved); (viś), m., N. of one of the principal Hindū deities, (in the later mythology regarded as 'the preserver,' and with Brahmā 'the creator' and Siva 'the destroyer,' constituting the well-known Tri-mūrti or triad; although Viṣṇu comes second in the triad he is identified with the supreme deity by his worshippers; in the Vedic period, however, he is not placed in the foremost rank, and though frequently invoked with Indra, Varuṇa, the Maruts, Rudra, Vāyu, and the Ādityas, his superiority to these is never stated, and he is even described in one place as celebrating the praises of Indra and deriving his power from that god [cf. his later name Indrānuja, 'younger brother of Indra'], the point which distinguishes him from the other Vedic deities being chiefly his striding over the heavens, which he is said to do in three paces [see tri-vikrama], explained as denoting the threefold manifestations of light in the form of fire, lightning, and the sun, or as designating the three daily stations of the sun in his rising, culminating, and setting; the later legend of the Vāmana Ava-tāra grew out of this Vedic conception [see balī]; he does not appear to have been included at first among the Ādityas or sons of Aditi, whose number in the Vedic period varies from six to eight, though in later times, when their number was raised to twelve, representing the sun in the twelve months of the year, Viṣṇu is accorded the foremost place among them; in the Brahmaṇas he is identified with sacrifice, and in one described as a dwarf; in the Mahā-bhārata and Rāmāyaṇa he is not connected with the sun, but gradually rises to the supremacy which he now enjoys as the most popular deity of modern Hindū worship, and although in some passages of the former he is represented as paying homage to Siva [cf. his name Siva-kīrtana], the great rivalry between these gods and their worshippers—who are respectively called Vaiṣṇavas and Saivas, and who each exalt their favourite to the first place in the Hindū Pantheon—is not fully developed till the period of the Purāṇas: the distinguishing feature in the character of the Post-vedic Viṣṇu is his condescending to become incarnate in a portion of his essence on ten principal occasions, to set right particular disturbances or deliver mankind from certain great dangers; his ten principal incarnations or Ava-tāras are, 1. the Matsya or 'fish'; 2. the Kūrma or 'tortoise'; 3. the Varāha or 'boar'; 4. the Nara- siṅha or 'man-lion'; 5. the Vāmana or 'dwarf' [see balī]; 6. Paraśu-rāma or 'Rāma with the axe,' i.e. Rāma, son of Jama-agni; 7. Rāma-candra or 'the illustrious Rāma,' i.e. Rāma, the son of Dasa-ratha and hero of the Rāmāyaṇa; 8. Kṛishṇa or 'the dark One,' who is held by the Vaiṣṇavas to be not so much an incarnation of Viṣṇu as the very essence of Viṣṇu or rather Viṣṇu himself, so that the Bala-rāma incarnation, which is sometimes mixed up with this eighth Ava-tāra, is also occasionally substituted for it; 9. Buddha or 'the enlightened One,' by adopting whom the Brahmans appear to have desired to effect a compromise between their own creed and Buddhism; 10. Kalki, which is yet to come; see these various incarnations s.v.; some of the Purāṇas multiply these Ava-tāras to the number of twenty-two or even twenty-four; as the supreme being Viṣṇu is often identified with Nārāyaṇa, the personified Puruṣa or primeval living spirit [described as moving on the waters, reclining on Śeṣha, the serpent of infinity, while the god Brahmā emerges from a lotus growing from his navel; cf. Maṇu I. 10]; the wife of Viṣṇu is Lakṣmī or Srī, and his paradise is called Vaiṣṇava; he is usually represented with a peculiar mark on his breast called Srī-vatsa, and as holding a śankha or conch-shell called Pāṇḍajanya, a chakra or quoit-like missile-weapon called Su-darśana, a gadā or club called Kaumodaki, and a padma or lotus; he has also a bow called Sārṅga, and a sword called Nandaka; his vāhana or vehicle is Garuḍa, q.v.; he has a jewel on his wrist called Syamantaka, another on his breast called Kaustubha, and the river Ganges is said to issue from his foot; the demons slain by him in his character of 'preserver from evil,' or by Kṛishṇa as identified with him, are Madhu, Dhenuka, Cāṇūra, Yamala, and Arjuna [see yamalarjuna], Kālanemi, Haya-grīva, Sakaṭa, Ariṣṭa, Kaitābha, Kaṇsa, Keśin, Mura, Sālva, Mainda, Dvi-vida, Rāhu, Hiranya-kaśipu, Vāpa, Kālīya, Narakā, Bali; he is worshipped under a thousand names, which are all enumerated in the Anuśāsana-parvan of the Mahā-bhārata, II. 6950-7056; for his epithet, 'younger brother of Indra,' see balī; he is sometimes regarded as the divinity of the lunar mansion called Śravaṇa; Viṣṇu Prajāpatya is said to be the author of Rig-veda X. 184; N. of Agni or fire; of one of the Vasus; of an ancient law-giver or writer of a law-book; a pure or pious person (= suddha). — Viṣṇu-riśha, am, n.
